Data Collections Developed

- Collaborative Information Seeking Lab Experiments Dataset: The dataset being shared from a set of lab experiments conducted by Chirag Shah and Roberto Gonzalez-Ibanez at Rutgers University in 2010-2011. It contains interaction logs (queries, page visits, relevance judgments, and snippets collected) by a total of 160 participants (students) in 80 teams, with each team working on an exploratory search task for about 30 minutes in a controlled lab setting. Available from <http://infoseeking.org/data.php#cis2010>
- Community Q&A Experiments Dataset: This is the dataset that Chirag Shah collected from Yahoo! Answers and got it assessed for content (answer) quality using Amazon's Mechanical Turk. The data was used in a SIGIR 2010 paper. Available from <http://infoseeking.org/data.php#cqa2010>.
- YouTube Collections - consist of nearly 100,000 YouTube videos, collected for different topics including presidential elections and cancer research, over two years with a number of attributes recorded almost every day. The collection includes actual videos, user comments, and user profiles.
- Yahoo! Answers - consists of more than 2 million questions in 25 different categories, along with nearly 15,000,000 answers and close to 1,000,000 user profiles.
- Links Data - includes inlinks and outlinks data crawled from the web about a number of talk-show videos. There are nearly 1 million links extracted from such data, creating a huge graph of connections.
